

About the Conference

The 2008 Monterey Homeland Security Conference provides a forum for industry and government to examine the air, space and maritime systems being used for homeland security, and how they are being employed today. This exploration will permit a better understanding of systems requirements and how they protect our security today, as well as the direction these systems will be taking in the future. This conference is the only forum that covers all these systems and will enable government and industry to develop synergistic relationships to protect the United States from both terrorists and disasters while securing our borders

This is an exceptional opportunity for first responders to see how the various platforms are being used in real world situations. The meeting will provide a systems overview and orientation training for these individuals. The final brief of each session will provide contact and utilization information. Additionally, a series of demonstrations will provide attendees with hands-on experience.
